Now in his fifties, Pep Ramis explores the machine that is the body with a poetic solo that questions the sense of the divine and the profane, spirituality and ignorance, the beautiful and the banal. The dancer's transformations occur on a white stage stripped bare, where precise movement and dialogue form the basic structure of a constantly shifting theatrical journey.

ABOUT PEP RAMIS

Pep Ramis was born in Majorca into a family where music and painting were a strong presence. He has studied the cello, voice and puppetry, and drawing has been a constant interest since childhood. Starting in 1985, he focused on theatre as a confluence of all his previous experiences, with the body as the reference axis. After working in 1986 with La Dux (a duo consisting of Maria Antònia Oliver and María Muñoz), in 1987 he took part in the Adriana Borriello piece Scirocco in Italy. In 1989 he worked with María Muñoz and the Mal Pelo group building stage sets and installation spaces. He is also a director, actor, dancer and co-director of
